2. Broadcast messages

Jed Stone, Frillby United: «From Sports Section:- LONGDALE COURIER - Skelsthorpe The Rise of the Odalisques.

As the world climbed into the 1840's a small group of artists caused a public sensation by displaying their collected works in a small gallery off Candock road. The group were the members of the 'Orientalism' movement. Their works featured reclining nudes generally set in the context of a Turkish Harem. The prudish society of the time was outraged by the public display of female nudity and they flocked to the gallery to find out just how shocked they really were. The scandle erupted to new heights when it was realised that the ladies in the pictures were not in fact 'life models' but the wives and girl friends of the artists and, in many cases, well known society figures! The scandle could have only one end. The 'Odalisques' as they were dubbed, were snubbed by ''society' at large and barred from attending any society functions, including 'Ladies Day' at Ascot!! Furious at this prudish reaca_ctionPAN style="mso-spacerun: yes"> the ladies in question grouped together to assault the bastions of the society that had rejected them so forcefully.»

3. Apprentices discovered

None.
